To the People of the United States.

—000—000—

THE Author of this brief desultory publication, begs to be understood that he has not written for the purpose of acquiring literary popularity, but with the hope of popular utility;—regarding the quality of the matter itself, rather than the garb in which it is clothed.

He has long cherished a decided confidence that if the community would appropriate as much wealth to the instruction of the rising generation, as is now devoted to the punishment of crimes, the desired object would be attained, and human misery averted, to a much greater extent.

The plan here proposed, for the general diffusion of knowledge through the medium of FREE LIBRARIES, has been submitted to the consideration of several of the most eminent statesmen and philanthropists in the United States, and received their unanimous and cordial approbation.

Mental-improvement is relied on as the most effectual antidote to the prevailing temperate and intemperate indulgence in the use of spirituous liquors.

Having sought with intense diligence, to detect the origin of the various calamities, which afflict Society, I feel urged by a sense of fraternal duty, to promulgate the result of my enquiries and experience; and solicit of my fellow citizens, only such share of their approbation and reward as they may find my humble efforts entitled to.

THE INTELLECTUAL TORCH.

*"Man's general ignorance, old as the flood,
For ages on ages has steep'd him in blood."*

KNOWLEDGE is essentially necessary to the well-being and happiness of every member of the human family, whether male or female, rich or poor.

To ignorance may be traced, the origin of most of the vices, crimes, errors and follies that distract and destroy mankind. It is the mother of misery :—a mazy labyrinth of perpetual night. Knowledge, on the contrary, is a torch perpetually flaming, which enables its possessor, to see clearly and understand every thing that surrounds him. It affords certain consolation, in all cases of difficulty and danger. Besides the intellectual pleasure, derived from the possession of knowledge, which far exceeds that of animal sensuality, the well informed man, (mechanic, farmer, or of whatever profession) being acquainted with the laws of nature—with moral and physical causes and effects, is capable of providing, generally with certainty, for the prosperity and security of himself and his family.

Confucius, the ancient Chinese Philanthropist, who disseminated virtue and happiness over a vast Empire, and is there venerated as a messenger from God, to this day, says, "Human nature came to us from Heaven pure and perfect; but in process of time, ignorance, the passions and evil examples have corrupted it. All consists in restoring it to its primitive beauty; and to be perfect we must ascend to that point from which we have fallen. Obey Heaven and follow the orders of him who governs

it. Love your neighbor as yourself.*—"Bad as the times are I shall do all I can to recall men to virtue; for in virtue are all things."

While our generous Legislatures are imitating the policy of European Monarchies, by making liberal appropriations for enlightening the few, by the endowment of Colleges and Universities, would not the many (who, in this country, supply their legislators with power as well as money) cordially cherish a policy, calculated, at the same time, to diffuse a small portion of the accumulated treasures of intellectual light of the present era, amongst themselves and their own children.*

Joseph Lancaster has discovered a method, which gives incalculable facility to the universal dissemination of the preliminary rudiments of science; and is rapidly gaining general assent in the United States. But the education of youth should not cease with the expiration of their attendance on public schools. The chasm between this period and that of their corporeal maturity, contains many stumbling blocks and dangerous snares. The art of reading, without books to read, is to the mind, as is a set of good teeth to the body, without food to masticate; they will alike suffer the evils of disease, decay, and eventual ruin.

The printing press is the main engine, and books are the rapid vehicles for the general distribution of knowledge. Yet notwithstanding the prodigious difference between the cost of books within the last 400 years, and the whole anterior space of time, but few comparatively can meet the expense of private libraries. Computing the leisure of every youth to be two hours daily from the age of ten to twenty-one years, independent of the requisite time for labor, sleep, eating, recreation, &c. and it is sufficient for reading a library of seven hundred volumes.

* The late enthusiastic Champion of the rights of man, Samuel Adams, in a letter to his venerable friend, John Adams, exerting his utmost eloquence to convince him of the superiority of the representative system of legislation, exclaims—"In order to secure the perpetuation of our excellent form of government to future generations, let Divines and Philosophers, Statesmen and Patriots, unite their endeavors to renovate the age, by impressing the minds of the people with the importance of educating their little Boys and Girls," &c.

duodecimo, of 300 pages each. This only season for laying the foundation of a virtuous and happy life, to the greatest portion of mankind, is totally lost. It is only necessary to offer knowledge to the voluntary acceptance of youth, in a proper manner, to produce an ardent appetite for it.

Intellectual cultivation is the basis of virtue and happiness. As mental improvement advances, vice and crimes recede. That desirable happy era, when the spirit of peace and benevolence shall pervade all the nations which inhabit the earth, when both national and personal slavery shall be annihilated; when nations and individuals shall cease to hunt and destroy each other's lives and property; when the science and implements of human preservation and felicity, shall be substituted for those of slaughter and woe; will commence, precisely at the moment when the rays of useful knowledge and wisdom, shall have been extended to the whole human family. By useful knowledge, I mean, not only an acquaintance with valuable arts and sciences, but also an understanding of our various moral and religious duties, in relation to our creator, to our neighbor, and to ourselves. By wisdom, I mean that kind of sagacity, which influences us to regulate our passions and conduct, in conformity to the precepts of knowledge, reason and religion. Until an approach towards such a state of things, is effected, the names of peace, liberty, and security, on this earth, will differ but little from an ignis fatuus, either to monarchs or their vassals. At present, violence bears universal and imperial sway; and ignorance is the magic spell which sustains its sceptre. This dense mist which enshrouds nearly the whole human race, can be penetrated and removed, with much greater certainty and facility, by the mild but invincible rays of intellectual light, than by opposing violence with violence, and evil to evil. The countryman in Æsop's Fables, was induced to throw off his cloak, by the gentle but melting rays of the physical sun, after the wind had exerted its fury in vain. What a boundless empire of glory and unalloyed bliss, might the monarchs and governments of the different nations, and all possessors of wealth attain, by causing their numerous subjects and brethren, perpetually encompassed by the snares of ignorance, vice, and oppression, to be instructed; thereby elevating poor degraded afflicted human nature, to that scale of dignity in the creation, which was evidently assigned to it by the supreme parent of the universe. In our country, particularly, instruction ought to be universal. For virtue only can sustain and perpetuate our political organization. "With knowledge and virtue the united efforts of ignorance and tyranny may be defied." (Miller, governor of North Carolina.) "In a government where all may aspire, to the highest offices in the state, it is essential that education should be placed within the reach of all. — Without intelligence, self government, our dearest privilege cannot be exercised." (Nicholas, governor of Virginia.) "Without knowledge, the blessings of liberty cannot be fully enjoyed or long preserved." (President Madison.)

General Washington, in his valedictory address to the people of the United States, says, "Promote then, as objects of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge, in proportion as the structure of the government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened."

But it has been questioned whether our constitution authorises the adoption of measures for the diffusion of knowledge and science. If our constitution does not now authorise measures which are likely to produce the greatest possible benefit to the country, and security to its liberties, it ought without delay to be so amended that it should.

Let American Legislators, both national and sectional, perform their duty to their country, and its posterity; and to mankind, by listening to the wise counsels of many conspicuous living sages, and pursue without hesitation the inestimable "parting advice" of George Washington, Benjamin Rush, Samuel Adams, and other departed friends and patrons of man; and establish public schools, and judiciously selected free public circulating libraries, in every part of the Republic. And as all men are vitally interested in the universal dissemination of knowledge and virtue, let all classes combine their influence and means, in aiding the cause of human happiness.

"Postpone, O ye Sages all meaner debates—
Convinced that 'tis light, must establish our states ;

Dispense and diffuse it—gild empire like day,
 Convinced that with freemen full knowledge is sway !”
 “ ’Tis Ignorance mainly binds people in chains,
 ’Tis this too the empire of Folly maintains !
 Vice shrinks from instruction like Ghost from the light ;
 And Despots shun noon-tide and covet the right.”

The discovery of the art of printing and of manufacturing paper, gives us a vast ascendancy over our ancestors in the propagation of knowledge. Dr. Darwin very properly, and very elegantly, calls the “PRINTING PRESS” the most useful of modern inventions ; the capacious reservoir of human knowledge, whose branching streams diffuse sciences, arts and morality, through all nations and ages.”

Let us suppose Confucius, Socrates and Seneca, were permitted to resume the possession of their former bodies and estates ; and remain on the earth for five years.—Would they not be transported with ecstasy, on beholding a paper-mill and a printing press. And yet would they not weep with regret and wonder, to find how few of the inhabitants even of civilized and apparently enlightened portions of the earth, are in possession of the inestimable moral precepts which they had, with so much labor and solicitude, prepared and bequeathed to mankind ? Seneca possessed an immense quantity of wealth. Would he not seize the opportunity with rapturous avidity, and invite his two benevolent colleagues to share with him the happiness, of enlisting, with his treasures, every paper-mill, printing press, type-maker and printer, that they could find, and devote the five years, totally, to the propagation of their wisdom to the remotest regions of the Globe.

“ It is a truth which cannot be too strongly impressed, that of all our exertions for the benefit of our fellow creatures, the education of the poor is the most efficacious.”—

[Morr.]

Finally, that ignorance is generally the radical source of vice and poverty, with their consequent train of complicated calamities ; and that intelligence generally produces results directly the reverse, are truths no longer problematical. Facts have shown their claims to the consideration of the legislator and the moralist. It now only remains to ascertain the most expeditious, economical, and practicable method, by which the universal diffusion of useful knowledge can be accomplished.

In the early period of my youth, a gentleman of the law, who resided in the vicinity of my father's house, at New-Lebanon, (N. Y.) kindly invited me to make as much use of his excellent library as I wished, observing that he was pleased to see young persons attached to reading, and glad to encourage them in the improvement of their minds. I accepted the privilege with gratitude, and improved it with persevering assiduity, as far as my leisure permitted, for several years. I also purchased shares in two public social libraries. At the age of 17 years, convinced of the inestimable benefits of reading useful books, I anxiously desired that they might, if possible, be extended to the great mass of the human family; and endeavored to discover some effective plan for this purpose. Indigence, which in most nations involves the majority, appeared to present the greatest obstacle. Hence the suggestion occurred that governments, or associations of individuals, might promote the object, by establishing in various districts, free circulating libraries, to be equally accessible to all classes and sexes without discrimination. With a view to confirm the practicability of the project, as well as to benefit the youth of the vicinity, I commenced a subscription of money and books, for the establishment of a free juvenile library.* The association consisted of the youth of both sexes, from the age of 12 to 21 years, under the title of "The juvenile society for the acquisition of knowledge." As there is seldom a youth in that district of country, that has not been taught the art of reading, the acceptance of the privilege was unanimous, and its effects evidently

* Dr. Moses Younglove, of the city of Hudson, patronized the library by a donation of about a dozen volumes of books, and addressed to me an encouraging letter, dated at Hudson, 19th September, 1804, which he concludes thus :

"I am much gratified to find your endeavors promising of utility, so far beyond what I anticipated when you first consulted me; for considering your youth and inexperience, I then feared your sagacity would be insufficient, but I must do you the justice to acknowledge the contrary result.

"From your friend,

salutary. The society and library continued to accumulate for several years. The permanency of the institution has, however, been since interrupted by the frequent rotation of the office of librarian, and by the difficulty of enforcing a compliance, with the bye laws. These inconveniences might be avoided by locating the libraries permanently in school-houses or academies, or in the care of some civil magistrate, and by having the bye laws confirmed by the legislature. The choice of suitable books to be purchased or admitted in donations, ought to be decided by a competent committee. Well selected free public libraries, it is believed, would form a very important auxiliary of public instruction, in all our schools, academies, hospitals, alms houses, cantonments, bridewells, goals, state prisons, penitentiaries, work houses, &c. &c.

The utility of this method of promoting moral improvement might be rendered doubly extensive if governments, or societies were to procure the execution, upon a large scale, of several of the most essential books on the conduct of life, and furnish them to all free library companies, at prime cost.—

Having been at the city of Philadelphia at the time the "Pennsylvania society for promoting public Economy," was instituted I communicated a sketch of the above plan, in a letter dated the 4th June, 1817, to Robert Vaux, Esq. one of the members of the Common Council of the city, who was the chairman of a committee, appointed by the society, on public schools. He informed me that the committee considered the idea new and valuable, and had instructed him to introduce it in his report of a system of public education which it was contemplated to adopt. He said they considered the plan particularly adapted for the benefit of numerous apprentices, who are prevented, during several years of their service, from attending public schools, by their occupations.

Having formerly published a small volume of anonymous Essays under the title of the "Intellectual Flambeau," treating principally on morals and the diffusion of knowledge, (from which, part of the materials of this pamphlet is derived,) the following letters were addressed to me, which, as they contribute to elucidate the subjects now under consideration, I think useful to insert.

Sir,

The mail brought me, a short time since, a copy of your Intellectual Falmbeau. I find thereby that you have exerted your mind zealously and long in favor of beneficence and knowledge. It is agreeable to see your detached essays and fugitive pieces collected into a book. It was fine saying, "gather up the fragments that none be lost."

It is a peculiar feature of our social condition in the Fredish dominions, that information is so generally spread among the people. There is another trait of character, of no less importance, the disposition to do what is right. The theory of those articles of our political constitutions, is derived from the consideration that our citizens, in the exercise of the elective franchise, are wise to understand, and virtuous to do, their duty. And while this state continues, we shall be the happiest nation on earth. But a being possessed of knowledge without virtue is a terrible creature, and comes up to my definition of a devil.

You have done well to oppose the torrent of distilled spirits that is overwhelming the land, and threatening ruin to its human inhabitants. The breaking of the levee at New-Orleans, or the dykes in Holland, is not half so dreadful or destructive to the prospects of the proprietors respectively, as the breach of the barriers of temperance by whiskey and rum. They are the torment and poison of the moral world. Great indeed will be the merit of him who can apply an effectual antidote. In the distribution of praise in this world, sufficient credit is not given to the author of Mahomedan religion for having forbidden the use of vinous liquors. But the effects of ardent spirits are by no means confined to the moral world. They extend to the physical part of man's constitution, and cause palsies, apoplexies, dropsies, drunkenness, madness, and a number of other woes.

Go on and be not weary in well doing. Be not discouraged; but continue to render yourself happy in endeavors to better the condition of your fellow-creatures.

Accept the assurance of my esteem and regard.

From Isaac Briggs, of the Society of Friends.

WILMINGTON, Del. 6 mo. 12, 1816.

Esteemed Friend,

With pleasure and approbation I have read thy little book entitled, "The Intellectual Flambeau;" and if this declaration from me be deemed by the author of any importance, it is freely at his service.

It has long been my settled opinion that knowledge diffused among the people, is the best foundation for civil liberty and happiness; and the more extensively it is diffused, the broader and more firm is the foundation, and the more glorious the superstructure.

To perpetuate the blessing of liberty, let the education of youth be considered an important and honorable employment—let those who have plenty assist, gratis, those who have but little—let one youth be taught by precept and example, that in using our reasoning powers, truth is the only legitimate object, and that candor is always due to an opponent in argument.

Thus a soil may be prepared in the youthful mind, from which will readily spring useful knowledge and the sweet charities of society—and envy, malice, hatred and party-spirit would have little or no room to grow.

Collections of useful and instructive books in different neighborhoods would, in my opinion, powerfully promote all these valuable ends. A very light contribution from the purses of the rich and honorable would, in every neighborhood, without expense to the poorer classes, place much useful knowledge within their reach, and even invite them to partake of it. The scheme appears to me fully worthy of an experiment, fairly made; and I am glad to find that my friend, the author of the Intellectual Flambeau, has devoted some of his time and talents to objects so interesting.

From Simon Snyder, Gov. of the state of Pennsylvania.

Sir,

Ignorance is the dark but broad foundation, upon which the tyrants of the bodies and souls of men erect their thrones. The general diffusion of knowledge is on the other hand the most efficient means of destroying the power of moral and political despotism. Few of mankind comparatively speaking, have the means of procuring and still fewer have the requisite leisure to study and digest extensive systems of ethics or politics. Small tracts are best suited for the perusal of the generality of mankind. Your little volume entitled "The Intellectual Flambeau" appears to me well calculated to diffuse impressively, correct knowledge on the subject of morals, and the political rights of man. Much light on those interesting subjects, is condensed into a small compass, and is within the reach of almost every man, however limited his means or his leisure. Persevere in your laudable work, and may your success equal your wishes, assured that you will reap that reward which results from a consciousness of having endeavored to promote the present and future happiness of your fellow men.

Accept assurances of personal regard from

Sir,

I cordially agree with the sentiments expressed by the governor, and join with him in wishing your success may be equal to your philanthropic desire—that your little book may have its due effect in correcting the habits of intemperance—the too predominant and prevailing vice of the present day—and that you may enjoy the high satisfaction which springs from an approving heart, and from the evidence that your labor has not been in vain.

With best wishes for your personal welfare

DR. JESSE TORREY, Jun.

A SERIOUS ADDRESS,

To the Rising Generation of the United States.

Eminently Favored Youth,

CONTEMPLATE calmly and attentively, the sacred legacy which must soon be committed to your charge, in trust for your successors—and eventually for the whole human race! You constitute the only insulated Arrarat, on which the Olive Branch of Peace, and the “glad tidings” of Freedom and Happiness, can be deposited and preserved to a groaning World, drowned in fears!! Prove yourselves, then, deserving of the exalted office which Providence has assigned you. To do this, it is indispensable that you cultivate your understandings, and store them with the golden treasures of knowledge, philosophy and wisdom. Where these abide Tyranny cannot exist—no more than darkness in the midst of sun beams. Know also that these will preserve you, infallibly, from a species of slavery, much more odious and destructive to human happiness, than the most barbarous political despotism that exists,

Of ignorance, vice, and all the ven’mous passions;—
Of intemperance, crimes, and a host of idle fashions.

Virtue and wisdom are the offspring of knowledge;—and “human happiness, says Seneca, is founded upon wisdom and virtue.” And further, that “philosophy gives us a veneration for God, a charity for our neighbor; teaches us our duty to Heaven, and exhorts to an agreement one with another; it arms us against all difficulties; it prompts us to relieve the prisoner, the infirm, the necessitous; it is the health of the mind; shines with an original light; makes us happy and immortal. In poverty it gives us riches or such a state of mind as makes them superfluous.”

My young friends remember that you possess within yourselves, the innate germ of wisdom, virtue, happiness—the spirit of God in your hearts, constantly pleading for your own welfare. You have only to listen to this friendly monitor, and feed the sacred spark with the light of instruction and wisdom.

“Wisdom, says Seneca, instructs us in the way of nature ; to live happily ; teaches us what things are good, what evil, that no man can be happy, but he that needs no other happiness but what he has within himself ; no man to be great or powerful, that is not master of himself. That this is the felicity of human life ; a felicity that can neither be corrupted or extinguished.—Nay, says he, so powerful is virtue, and so gracious is Providence, that every man has a light set up within himself for a guide, which we do all of us both see and acknowledge, though we do not pursue it.* That a good man is happy within himself, and independent upon fortune : kind to his friend ; temperate to his enemy : religiously just ; indefatigably laborious, &c. That there is not a duty to which Providence has not annexed a blessing”.

Finally, without taking up the discussion of future rewards and punishments, I must declare my conviction that in our present stage of temporal existence, every deviation from the path of rectitude and duty, is as certainly punished with its appropriate penalty, as that pain is the inevitable consequence of thrusting our hands into fire, and indicates an equal deficiency of wisdom and common sense.

Therefore exert yourselves without delay, to secure the means of enlightening your understandings with instruction. For this purpose form yourselves into societies in your respective neighborhoods, and establish free libraries, by means of subscriptions, and contributions of books.

“ Take fast hold of instruction ; let her not go ; keep her ; for she is thy life.”

I am not inclined to advise you to restrain yourselves from a rational indulgence in innocent athletic amusements, but fail not, if you prefer genuine happiness to misery and repentance, to devote the most of your evenings and leisure hours to mental improvement and reading. Read the life of the celebrated Franklin and follow his advice. But beware of the Syren snares of

* “ I know the right, and I approve it too ;
Condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong pursue.”

POPE.

NOVELS. Is not a beautiful garden, in a state of living verdure, and native bloom both more entertaining and instructive, than a heap of counterfeit artificial flowers made of paper, yielding fruits the most pernicious ?

Let your library commence with the following books ; making about 20 volumes. A contribution of 25 cents each from 100 persons would probably defray the cost of the whole of them. The youth, not already trained to depravity, that can read merely these few books, without being fascinated with the pleasures of science, wisdom, benevolence, and moral rectitude, must be a prodigy of stupidity and worthlessness.

The Looking Glass for the Mind, The Newtonian System of Philosophy Explained, Burton's Lectures to Young Ladies, Lady's Library, Mavor's Abridgment of Natural History, Historical Grammar, Blair's Grammar of Chemistry, Joyce's Scientific Dialogues, Seneca's Morals, Translation of Xenophon's Socrates, Priestly's Considerations for the use of Young Men, Baron Knigge's Practical Philosophy of Social Life, or the Art of Conversing with Men, Beauties of History, History of Sanford and Merton, Universal Geography, &c.

While in health, taste not a single drop of distilled spirit, for except as a remedy for some diseases, it is a positive poison to man or any other animal ; this important fact is demonstrated, not only by chemical analysis, which proves that in the process of fermentation the material of spirit imbibes from the atmosphere a substance, called oxygen, the internal application of which is well known to be noxious to animal life ; but also by its effects upon brute animals, some kinds of which, it kills* instantaneously, and impedes the growth of others !

Accept, beloved youth, these counsels of your sincere friend. Heed them with fidelity ; and peace, contentment, good will, and gladness shall be the companions of your lives.

*An individual who was formerly addicted to the use of distilled spirits, stated that he compelled a fowl to swallow a table spoonful of rum, which produced immediate death !

TO PHILANTHROPISTS.

In the hope that the impulse of a disposition "to do good," may influence, some magistrate, physician, tutor, preacher, attorney, private citizen, or generous youth, in every district in which these sheets may be circulated; to volunteer his exertions for the institution of a free library, and reading society, I have procured for publication, a correct copy of the Constitution originally adopted by the Juvenile Library Society at New-Lebanon. It was composed by the writer of these pages, at the age of 17 years. The language or plan can be varied as may be found expedient.

THE CONSTITUTION

Of the New Lebanon Juvenile Society for the Acquisition of Knowledge.

NEW-LEBANON, March 12, 1804.

WHEREAS we the youth of New-Lebanon, are fully convinced that it is indispensably necessary for our happiness and welfare, that we cultivate our understandings, improve our morals, and acquire useful knowledge while we are young, and while our minds are susceptible of improvement. And therefore we do hereby agree to associate, and form ourselves into a Society, for the purpose of establishing a Library, improving our minds and acquiring useful Knowledge.—And we do agree ordain and determine :—

1. That this Society shall meet together every first Monday in March, and choose from among themselves, a President, Librarian, Secretary, and a committee of five, who shall transact the business of the Society and continue in office until others are duly elected.

2. The President, or in his absence the Librarian and three others of the committee, shall form a board competent to transact all business of the Society; or in the absence of the President and Librarian, four of the committee, who shall choose a chairman for the present meeting.

3. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at the meetings and superintend the concerns of the Society; and to give advice as to the purchase of suitable books, &c.

4. It shall be the business of the Librarian to keep the books carefully that belong to this Society, and write on each of them, that it belongs to "The Library of the New-Lebanon Juvenile Society for the Acquisition of Knowledge;" to receive all contributions of money or books that may be made by the friends of knowledge and virtue for the encouragement and benefit of the Society; to receive all books that may be lent to the Society: to keep a separate catalogue of them, and an account of the fines received upon them, which shall be paid to the owners of the books; to collect fines and money subscribed, which money he shall lay out for books and such other articles as he shall deem necessary to promote the interest of the Society; to keep a record of the books drawn, and an account, of receipts and expenditures, and to keep all the papers and writings belonging to this Society.

5. It shall be the office of the Secretary to write a record of the proceedings and resolutions of the Society. And as this association is formed with a view to diffuse useful knowledge, and promote virtue as extensively as possible, the Secretary shall exhibit on the meeting house of New Lebanon, once in every six months, an advertisement, inviting all the youth of New Lebanon, between the age of 12 and 21 years, to join this Society: and the Librarian is authorised to admit all such youth as members of the Society, on signing these articles; but no person shall be a member of the Society, who is not between the aforesaid ages.

6. It shall be the duty of the committee to examine the books returned at each meeting; and on all books damaged by ill usage, they shall lay such fines as they shall deem just and reasonable: tearing, greasing, dirtying, and turning leaves down to be considered as damages done by ill usage.

7. The stated monthly meetings of this Society shall be held at the house of the Librarian, on the first Monday in every month in the year, at six o'clock in the afternoon; when every book before drawn out, shall be returned, in order that they may be inspected and that a new drawing of books may take place. And any member that draws a book and neglects to return it before the stated time aforesaid, shall pay a fine of six cents, and one cent per day thereafter until it is returned; and if not returned within two months after it was drawn out, the delinquent shall pay for the book at the appraisal of the committee.

8. Any member that is indebted to the Society for fines or otherwise, and neglects to pay the debt within one month after it becomes due, shall be prohibited the use of the Library until it is paid.

9. Any member returning a book, before drawn, to the Librarian, before another meeting, may draw any other one found in the library.

10. The members of this Society shall be divided into six classes, alphabetically, according to the first letters of their surnames, the beginning of the alphabet to draw first, the second class to draw next, and so on at the first meeting; at the next meeting the first class to draw last, and the second class first, and so on from time to time, by just rotation, each class agreeing among themselves who shall draw first.

11. This Constitution may at any time hereafter be amended or altered if found necessary, by the agreement and consent of two third parts of the members of this Society and not otherwise.

12. The Librarian may, if he shall see fit, hire out books to persons not members of this Society, at the rate of six cents per week for each book.

13. We do agree to pay to the Librarian, the sums of money or its value in such books as he will accept, set against our names, which money he shall lay out for books for the use of the society.

We whose names are subscribed do solemnly engage to conform ourselves to this Constitution. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our names."

and by 147 others.

The following form of an instrument for subscription, is as nearly similar as I can recollect, to the one which I prepared and circulated among the citizens of New Lebanon, during the winter evenings in 1803 and 4. The amount generally subscribed by each was fifty cents;—some subscribed a dollar and some 25 cents; others contributed books. The young persons of both sexes, who were possessed of means, also, generally subscribed from 12 cents to a dollar, on signing the articles of the constitution. But many were admitted who contributed nothing.

Form of Subscription for Free Libraries.

"The subscribers, impressed with the belief, that the general dissemination of useful knowledge and instruction among the rising generation, would tend to the promotion of virtue and happiness, agree to contribute and pay to ——— the amount, or its value in useful books, set respectively against our names; to be appropriated to the institution of a free circulating library.

And whenever twelve youth, of either sex, between the age of 12 and 21 years, shall have associated for the purpose of mental improvement, the aforesaid ——— is authorised to deliver the money or books by us subscribed and paid, to such agent or committee as shall be appointed by the society to receive, and purchase books with the same."

ESSAYS

On the pernicious effects of the habitual intemperate or temperate use of Spirituous Liquors.

Verily and sincerely is my conviction of the notorious fact, that, independent of all the other infernal marshals that annoy mankind under the banners of Ignorance, the grand head traitress, (making the brain her head-quarters) Intemperance, her commanding chief, directing a fiery, deathly army of assassins, consisting of millions of battalions of half gills, gills, half pints and pints of whiskey, gin, rum, brandy, &c. &c. treacherously and murderously betraying their poisoned arrows, (with a smile and a kiss) into the sanguem cordis (heart's blood) of their dearest lovers and friends; commits, annually, greater and more irretrievable depredations on the lives, health, wealth, domestic harmony, virtue and morals, and physical power of the aggregate population of the republic of the United States, than a numerous hostile army could inflict by a perpetual warfare!

A few days after having written the above paragraph, looking over a bundle of old pamphlets, I met with an account of the proceedings of that benevolent association of people generally styled Quakers, "for promoting the improvement and civilization of the Indian natives."—Here I found a speech addressed to the committee of Friends, at Baltimore, by the Indian Chief called the Little Turtle, in 1802. I consider it a still more superb and moving specimen of Indian eloquence than that of Logan—It is a pathetic sermon or epitaph on thousands of his poisoned brethren! As short as it is, before I could go through it, I was several times compelled to pause, until I could suppress the sympathetic emotions which it excited, and recover my interrupted vision from irresistible suffusions of moisture. Who, that has not a heart of flint and an eye of horn, can view this picture, drawn by an unlettered savage, and then wheel his eye over the frightful portraiture, (as large, and no less real than life) which exhibits the present assimilated condition of us civilized white men, with apathy? Here is the speech:—

*"Brothers and friends—*When our forefathers first met on this island, your red brethren were very numerous. But since the introduction amongst us of what you call spirituous liquors, and what we think may be justly called poison, our numbers are greatly diminished. It has destroyed a great part of your red brethren.

*"My Brothers and Friends—*We plainly perceive, that you see the very evil which destroys your red brethren; it is not an evil of our own making; we have not placed it amongst ourselves; it is an evil placed amongst us by the white people; we look to them to remove it out of our country. We tell them—brethren fetch us useful things; bring goods that will clothe us, our women and our children, and not this evil liquor that destroys our reason, that destroys our health, that destroys our lives. But all we can say on this subject is of no service, nor gives relief to your red brethren.

*"My Brothers and Friends—*I rejoice to find that you agree in opinion with us, and express an anxiety to be, if possible, of service to us in removing this great evil out of our country; an evil which has had so much room in it, and has destroyed so many of our lives, that it causes our young men to say, "we had better be at war with the white people, this liquor which they introduce into our country, is more to be feared than the gun and the tomahawk. There are more of us dead since the treaty of Greenville, than we lost by the six years war before. It is all owing to the introduction of this liquor amongst us."

"Brothers—When our young men have been out hunting, and are returning home loaded with skins and furs, on their way, if it happens that they come along where some of this whiskey is deposited, the white man who sells it, tells them to take a little drink; some of them will say no, I do not want it; they go on till they come to another house, where they find more of the same kind of drink; it is there offered again; they refuse; and again the third time; but finally the fourth or fifth time one accepts of it and takes a drink, and getting one, he wants another; and then a third and fourth, till his senses have left him. After his reason comes back again to him, when he gets up and finds where he is, he asks for his peltry—the answer is "you have drank them"—where is my gun? "It is gone;" where is my blanket? "It is gone;" where is my shirt? "you have sold it for whiskey!!". Now, Brothers, figure to yourselves what condition this man must be in. He has a family at home; a wife and children, who stand in need of the profits of his hunting.—What must be their wants, when he himself is even without a shirt!"

One of the most prominent advantages of civilization over the savage state, is considered to be the protection of the rights of the social compact and its members, by equitable laws, from aggressions of individuals. Let us inquire whether the habitual drinker of distilled spirits does not, first by anticipation, and eventually in reality, plunder the public treasury? A rich man, or a poor man, no matter which, (for Intemperance, like its legitimate successor, Death, soon levels all distinctions as to fortune, and the former does also, in dignity and respectability) and perhaps honest, except his fatal mistake, of being willing to sacrifice his health, life, property, reputation, his wife and children, together with almost every source of social enjoyment to the heathenish God of stills, swallows daily the worth of a given amount in distilled spirits, exceeding the collateral income of his trade, farm or labor, exclusive of what is required for customary family expenses. Hence, if mathematical computation tells the truth, this unfortunate man, together with his family, so far as any or all are incapable of labor, within one, two, four, eight or sixteen years according to the case, are inevitably pushed into a situation that demands the compassion and charity of the public and of his more prudent neighbors. It is an ancient and established truth, that a stitch in time saves nine, although but little heeded, and that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. General knowledge is the only infallible remedy for this moral pestilence. To American Sages, therefore,

The aggrieved Genius of America appeals ;
To apply the SOVEREIGN BALM, and relieve those ills.

A statement has been communicated to me, from an authentic source, that one of our most distinguished statesmen, having been a candidate for a seat in one of our State Legislatures, disdained to dishonor himself and his country, by purchasing the suffrages of his fellow citizens, with distilled spirits; the consequence of which obstinacy was, that an ignorant grog-seller, who could neither read nor write his name, not being over nice about honor, by distributing whiskey profusely amongst the electors, obtained the appointment.* With much pain I have also lately learned the following alarming fact, from credible authority: A philanthropic member of the Legislative Council of one of the capital cities of the United States, clearly recognising the calamitous consequences, proceeding from the existence of the great number of tippling shops, sanctioned by the public authorities, in vain exerted his efforts for a reduction of the number of these whirlpools of destruction and woe, for two years, when, being discouraged, he withdrew from that employment with chagrin. One of the members was so in-

*This method of *quicken*ing the senses of American citizens to an understanding of their interests, has been successfully practised for many years in several of the states, by candidates for seats in Congress. And yet we pompously and justly too, style ourselves the most enlightened, virtuous, free and happy nation on earth.

genuous as to acknowledge, that the reason why he could not unite with him in effecting that object was, that he obtained his living by selling distilled spirits to the retailers by the barrel, and that the retailers got their living by selling it to others in smaller quantities! On hearing this, I exclaimed, "if there be a city in the United States, the public agents of which are governed in their proceedings by such motives, then the Lord have mercy on that city."

The dawn of this day had not commenced, when the preceding thoughts and facts glanced thro' my mind in instantaneous succession.

As the sun began to ascend and diffuse its golden radiance over the American hemisphere; while I alternately beheld this majestic agent of the Creator, and the venerable walls of the last and only solitary castle,* in which the persecuted Genius of Liberty is permitted to dwell throughout this vast Globe, the following ejaculation sprang spontaneously from my melted heart: "God of the Universe, enlighten my soul with the fire of thy spirit;—permit me to be the humble organ through which a spark thereof may be transmitted to the souls of men in the United States of America, that a bright flame may be thereby kindled in their minds, that shall display clearly to their senses, a view of the fatal and inextricable vortex into which they are gradually and unwarily plunging themselves and their posterity!" I then yielded to an irresistible impulse, which enjoined it on me to devote the preceding day to the execution of this essay, which, if it prove the means of protecting a single innocent female, and her babes from the venomous jaws of the most cruel hydra that is permitted to enter our dwellings and receive our voluntary embraces and cordial hospitalities; to me, it will afford a superior compensation to that of possessing all the diamonds of all the Monarchs of Europe.

NOTE.—Having written the above essay, while at the City of Washington in 1815, it was published originally in the National Intelligencer.

PHENOMENON

Of extracting the greatest Good from the worst Evil.

I shall employ this opportunity to announce to the citizens of the United States my determination to circulate, as extensively as possible, throughout the country, memorials to the Congress, and also to the state Legislatures, praying that sufficient funds may be raised, by a liberal system of duties on ARDENT SPIRITS, for the universal establishment of FREE LANCASTRIAN SCHOOLS, AND FREE PUBLIC LIBRARIES.

Spirituous liquors ought to be answerable for the mischiefs which they produce.

"From a report of an association in Portland, called the Moral Society, it appears that out of 85 persons subject to the public charity in that place, 71 had become so from their intemperance, and that out of 118 supplied at their own houses by the town, more than half are of that description. The expences of the town in its charities exceed 6000 dollars, and more than two thirds of that sum went to support such persons as were made poor by their vices. Of consequence, 7000 persons are taxed 4000 dollars by the vices of their neighbors. From these well known facts the report proceeds to calculate almost half a million of dollars paid in the same way in this state only, and if in the same proportion in the United States, the whole amount must be millions. We all enquire what can be done. We cannot take away personal liberty. We cannot prohibit spirituuous liquors. We cannot punish persons not convicted of any breach of the laws. We cannot distinguish in the business of life, because the rich are sometimes as blame-worthy as their less wealthy neighbors. We can say that when any persons are committed to the public charity, they shall be properly guarded against temptations. That their habits shall be considered, and all restraints which can consist with health, shall be laid. We might hope that some laws of education and life might obtain. But as no love of fame, no great talents, or public trusts, can be said to have been sufficient to prevent men and nations from the guilt and the shame of intemperance we have a right in the administration of charity to regard not only the health and hopes of the sufferers, but the safety and the economy of civil society."

The report of the Moral Society exhibits the ravages of intemperance on property. The following lines, which I cut out of one of the Philadelphia newspapers a year ago, depict its barbarous inroads upon domestic felicity; in comparison with which money is "trash."

DISSIPATION.

NOT the jaws of Charybdis nor the hoarse rocks in Scylla,
Not all the fell dangers that lurk in the deep,
Not the earthquake's deep yawn, nor the volcano's lava,
Not the pestilence's breath, or the hurricane's sweep;

Not all the dread monsters that live thro' creation
Have caused such destruction, such mis'ry and woe,
As from that arch pest of mankind, Dissipation,
Through the civilized world incessantly flow.

'Tis a vortex insatiate on whose giddy bosom
The victim is whirl'd till his senses are gone,
Till, lost to all shame and the dictates of reason,
He lends not one effort to ever return.

Ah! view on its surface the ruins of genius,
The wreck of a scholar, the christian and friend!
The learning, the wit, the graces that charm'd us,
In the mind-drowning bowl meet a premature end.

Ah! hear, drown'd in tears, the disconsolate mother,
Lament the lost state of a favorite son,
Hear the wife and the child, the sister and brother
Mourn a husband, a father, a brother undone.

One of the principal funnels to the insatiable vortex of intemperance is the generally prevailing popular error, that the temperate use of ardent spirits is innocent and even healthful and necessary. I was chilled with surprise and almost with despair, to hear several of the chosen guardians of our national welfare, standing in their places in the House of Representatives, proclaim their sentiments that "distilled spirits had become one of the necessities of life, that the farmer could not do without it in his agricultural labors, and that to impose heavy taxes on it would be oppressive to industry."* But I was much gratified however, to see that a majority, (though a very small one) were of a different opinion. It was strongly urged by one gentleman that whiskey is an important article of manufacture; that it adds to the wealth of this nation, and ought to be encouraged by our government. The eye that cannot perceive that the reverse is the fact must be both morally and politically blind. For a community to permit or encourage the importation or manufacture of distilled spirits, for the sake of the revenue derived therefrom, is precisely the same policy as it would be to institute premiums for the construction of daggers to stab its own vitals with.

Extract from Darwin's Zoonomia Sec. 30. "When the expediency of laying a further tax on the distillation of spirituous liquors from grain was canvassed before the House of Commons some years ago, it was said of the distillers, with great truth, "they take the BREAD from the people and convert it into POISON!" Yet is this manufactory of disease permitted to continue, as appears by its paying into the treasury above £. 900,000,† near a million of money annually. And thus, under the names of Rum, Brandy, Gin, Whiskey, usquebaugh, wine, cyder, beer, and porter, alcohol is become the bane of the Christian world, as opium of the Mahometan.

Evae ! parce, Liber,
Parce, gravi metuende thyrsos !—HOR."
O ! from grievous sting of Bacchus' fatal dart,
Be preserv'd :—defend yourself with all your art !

But it is almost as useless to expostulate with veterans in the ranks of Bacchus, as with those who are confident that they are under the power of witchcraft. This fact is well illustrated by the reply of a boozy tipler to a Quaker of Baltimore, who informed me that he was rep-

"Let it not be said ardent spirits have become necessary from habit in harvest, and in other seasons of uncommon and hard labor. The habit is a bad one, and may be easily broken. Let but half a dozen farmers combine in a neighborhood to allow higher wages to their laborers, &c."—DR. RUSH. The farmers in one of the counties of Pennsylvania have lately adopted public resolutions to suppress the use of distilled spirits amongst their laborers, at all seasons.

resenting to him the terrible consequences of intemperance, "I have no doubt, said he, but that all you say is true, but you might as well sing psalms to a dead horse as to talk to me." Yet let us not forget that these unfortunate victims of their own weakness and imprudence are still men; and claim our sympathy and commiseration for their want of discretion. And if warnings and entreaties will not prevail, let us resort to more efficacious means for their relief, as well as for the protection of the common interest against the effects of their conduct. Reproachful denunciations, however, are not only useless, but injurious and uncharitable. "We all enquire what can be done? We cannot take away personalliberty." &c. What is liberty? Does it permit one individual to deprive another, directly or indirectly of the fruits of his toil and prudence? What is the difference, except in a criminal point of view, whether my neighbor picks my pocket or places his weeping starving wife and children in such a situation, that I must either empty my pocket myself to relieve them, or see them perish? It is lamentable, as well as astonishing that so few of our citizens have granted this subject its lawful weight either in the scales of policy, morality, physics or religion. Is there an individual who is not now affected, more or less, in some shape or other, from the immense deficit in the national wealth, occasioned by the appropriation of 20,000,000 dollars annually during the last twenty years, to a threefold worse purpose than annihilation? Twice we have bravely resisted and spurned political despotism, and at length we have prostrated our necks under the sceptre of king ALCOHOL.— With an incredible infatuation we have sacrificed the golden presents of Ceres on the hissing copper altars of crazy Bacchus. Were I allowed the privilege of obliterating the two greatest scourges of mankind, I would select the art of distilling food, and the art of war. I am not disposed to attach any degree of moral turpitude, to manufacturers or sellers of ardent spirits; but it does seem to me that if they would revolve and scrutinize the subject in its real genuine character, they would not hesitate to renounce an employment which involves in its development, the propagation of so much human misery and wretchedness.* But the nation must take this matter in hand, or nothing essential can be done.

Let the tribunal consist of the inhabitants of the United States, male and female, old and young, of whatever condition, as jurors: and their legislators as judges.—Let every one that can speak say yea or nay, and record it with his or her name or mark. We know women and children are not allowed a voice in making laws, but in this case particularly, their fate is seriously concerned, and their voices ought to be listened to, and duly regarded. Let the public will be called forth by meetings and memorials. Let it be ascertained whether the majority prefer self-preservation or self-destruction. Dr. Rush says, “let good men of every class unite and besiege the general and state governments with petitions to limit the number of taverns; to impose heavy duties upon ardent spirits, &c.”

Another writer who has given a lively picture of the devastations of distilled liquors, says, “let men who wish well to their country, unite in petitions to government, to impose still heavier duties upon imported spirits, and our own distillers; and to regulate taverns and retailers of spirits; and to secure the property of habitual drunkards, for the benefit of their families.”

There has been “much speaking,” much writing, much printing, and much preaching, on this subject, and but little benefit seems to result from the whole. It is time his conscience, and burnt all his distilled liquors publicly on the summit of a mountain. Another in Delaware, beat in the heads of his casks. A respectable French gentleman having purchased an estate at Buffalo (N. Y.) on which was a distilling establishment, demolished it immediately on taking possession, saying he “had done one good deed.” to try a little doing. This will accomplish much more than talking. "Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock."—[JESUS.] Let our "good men," of whom the number is undoubtedly great, adopt the beautiful maxim of the late Cotton Mather, author of "Etsays to do good," "that a power and an opportunity to do good, not only gives a right to the doing of it, but makes the doing of it a duty." The inducement for doing good, ought to be further strengthened by the circumstance that it carries with it its own reward; or as I once heard a public speaker of the Friends' Society elegantly express the sentiment, "that while you are plucking thorns from your neighbor's breast, you are strewing your own path with flowers." It is in the power of men of affluence to be the most active in effecting a reformation of the public morals, and in point of interest they are also most concerned.

I have prepared the following forms of memorials, which it is my intention to offer for signature as widely as it may be in my power; and I do most ardently hope they may be transcribed and presented in every house occupied by human inhabitants, in the United States.—Preachers, School-masters, Post masters, and others to whom it may be convenient and agreeable, are respectfully invited to cooperate in this exceedingly necessary work. Let us not shrink from the task, on account of its magnitude, and the fear of its impracticability. And if we even fail to accomplish all that we would, there is still a self satisfaction, and must be some utility, in doing all that we can.

Memorial of Sundry inhabitants of the United States of America, to the President, Senate, and House of Representatives;—praying that laws may be enacted for the suppression of the unnecessary use of spirituous liquors, and for the general diffusion of knowledge.

Whereas we the subscribers view with deep concern, the alarming and increasing extent of the moral, political and physical calamities produced by the vast consumption of spirituous liquors in our country. The reality of the evil is so conspicuous and palpable, that it would be a waste of ink and paper to delineate its specific features. The abstract principles of liberty, and the relative rights of man, authorise and demand legislative interposition. The citizen who wantonly destroys his property; his health; his mental faculties ; by drinking spirituous liquors ; and thereby thrusts himself or a helpless family upon the public bounty, commits a trespass on the rights of the community. We consider it the duty of government to adopt measures for preventing such aggressions no less than for the security and recovery of ordinary debts.

And whereas we are fully convinced that the early instruction of the rising generation in the moral duties of life, would contribute materially to avert the evils under consideration. We therefore implore and request the government of these United States, to provide for the education of every youth, whose education is not otherwise provided for, within the jurisdiction thereof.—For this purpose, as well as to discourage intemperance, we earnestly recommend that a duty of fifty cents per gallon be imposed upon all spirituous liquors manufactured within the United States ;—and one dollar per gallon upon all wines and spirituous liquors, which shall be imported :—the monies accruing from the duties on domestic liquors, to be appropriated to the establishment of free Lancastrian and common schools, and free circulating libraries, in the respective districts in which the taxes shall be levied and collected :—and the duties on imported liquors to be applied to the same purpose, in such manner and place as the wisdom of Congress shall suggest.

Memorial of the inhabitants of the State of——— to the Governor, and Legislature thereof, praying that effectual laws may be enacted for the suppression of the unnecessary use of spirituous liquors, &c.

Whereas the subscribers behold with fearful concern, the alarming ravages of spirituous liquors on the health, lives, property, morals and domestic happiness of the people of this State. Self-defence, and the equal rights of man authorise legislative interposition.

The citizen who destroys the products of his labor, his health, his mental faculties, by drinking spirituous liquors, and thereby thrusts himself or a helpless family upon the public bounty, commits a trespass on the rights of the community. We consider it the duty of government to adopt measures for preventing such aggressions, no less than for the security and recovery of ordinary debts. We therefore implore and request the legislature of this state to enact laws for placing the property of habitual drunkards, in the care of trustees, for the benefit of their families ; to be restored again whenever such mentally diseased persons shall have recovered their reason, and discretion:—To restrict the licences for selling distilled spirits by drams, solely to such Inns as shall be considered requisite for the entertainment of travellers :—To impose a tax of one cent upon every half gill of distilled spirits vended by Innkeepers; and 12 1-2 cents per quart upon all distilled spirits, by whomsoever sold, in quantities exceeding one gill, and less than ten gallons : And to appropriate the monies thence accruing, to the establishment of free Lancastrian and common schools, free circulating libraries ; Alms houses, Asylums and Infirmaries for the benefit of indigent victims of intemperance ; houses of employment ; and to such other purposes as may be found expedient.

It is the more indispensable to obtain the sentiments of the people at large, on this momentous national question, in the manner here proposed, on account of a prejudice indulged by many, (legislators in particular, with whom I have frequently discussed the subject,) that legislative restrictions upon the distribution and use of spirituous liquors, would excite disaffection and rebellion. Such is my confidence in a contrary result, even with respect to the captives of Intemperance themselves ; and such my impressions of the imperious necessity and duty of combatting the progress of that unmerciful tyrant and murderer ; that I feel willing to devote a large proportion of the subsequent time that my life may be preserved, to the purpose of ascertaining the fact. I am not a fanatic ; but I confess my solicitude and zeal on this subject, approach nearly to enthusiasm. The case surely demands the concurrent enthusiasm and perseverance of all who possess the least sympathy for the sufferings and woes of their fellow-men. And the very sufferers are not so indifferent as has been generally supposed. Many have addressed their supreme Parent, with supplications to rescue and protect them from the fascinating charm, and twining gripe with which that cunning serpent Alcohol inveigles its prey. And they are not wholly averse to coercive means of relief. Several have sought their emancipation, in oaths of abstinence for a given term. Some have offered premiums for a remedy to the habit of drinking ;—and one individual of this description, declared to the writer of these essays, that he “ wished government would impose a tax upon whiskey of five dollars a gallon, and then he should stop drinking it."

On the whole, the probability is, that a more formidable resistance to the taxation of spirituous liquors, will spring from the manufacturers, importers and sellers of them, than from the consumers. This conclusion is authorised by the fact, that so many fortunes have been acquired by those occupations; by the acknowledgment of the Alderman, as narrated in the preceding essays, (page 23) and decisively by the late remonstrance published by the grocers of the city of New-York. So that the business at length resolves itself into this great moral and political problem;—WHETHER THE MAJORITY OF OUR CITIZENS, FROM WHOM ALL POLITICAL AUTHORITY ORIGINATES, SHALL FIND IT TO BE JUSTICE AND CORRECT POLICY, TO GRANT ONE SECTION OF THE COMMUNITY, THE PRIVILEGE OF "GETTING THEIR LIVING." OR ACCUMULATING ESTATES, THROUGH THE BANKRUPTCY AND MORAL AND PHYSICAL DESTRUCTION OF ANOTHER MORE NUMEROUS, BUT IMPRUDENT SECTION?

THE HABITUAL TEMPERATE USE OF SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS, A VIOLATION OF MORAL PURITY, AND RELIGIOUS DUTY.

So far as it is in our power to understand the designs and laws of our Creator, for the regulation of our conduct, it is both our duty and interest to yield perfect compliance. The preservation of health and life, is unquestionably one of our most palpable and explicit duties. Every act therefore which impairs our health and diminishes the period of our lives, is a violation of the express command of God. I shall endeavor to demonstrate by physiological facts, that both these effects are produced more or less, by the application of distilled spirits to the stomach, in whatever quantity. All our food, whether vegetable or animal, is originally derived from the vegetable kingdom. The materials from which vegetables receive their nutriment generally exist in an oxidized state. Thus water contains nearly seven eighths of its weight of oxygen; carbonic acid nearly three fourths, and all decaying vegetable and animal matter is found highly saturated with it. The great process of vegetation appears to consist in decomposing the various substances which supply the rudiments of its food, and in expelling the excess of oxygen, with which they are always combined. The first product of vegetation is sugar, which contains 8 parts hydrogen, 28 carbon, and 64 of oxygen, and being the crudest and most abundant article of food that exists, is probably designed for the support of the graminivorous races of animals; as the various grasses, including the sugar cane, yield more of it than any other plants. Whether a digression or not, I must here announce the important fact that sugar is an improper and deleterious article of diet for man, and a prolific source of disease, which, if my life is spared, I shall at a future time, attempt to demonstrate both from facts and the physical laws of nature. The second stage towards the perfectability of the nutritive principle, is that of gum or mucilage, which contains only half its quantity of oxygen; 14 parts in a hundred less than sugar. Fecula or starch is a fraction finer, and is the product of those seeds which constitute the principal and probably the most appropriate food for men. Sugar is found in the most common juice or sap of plants and trees, while gum is confined chiefly to the bark, root, or heart, and fecula and oil, to the seeds and nuts. Oil is still farther refined, containing 77.243 carbon, 13.36 hydrogen, and only 9.427 of oxygen. Gluten the most nutritive substance with which we are acquainted, is composed, according to Accum, entirely of hydrogen, carbon and nitrogen. It is afforded in greater quantity from wheat, than any other vegetable.

Now in order to obtain alcohol, (or whiskey.) from any of the seeds used for bread, it is necessary that they should be subjected to the recontamination of oxygen, so as to reduce them back to their crude saccharine state. Then the vinous fermentation, imparting still more oxygen, must be applied and continued until those once nutritive milky materials have become sensibly acid or sour. From this loathsome leaven (or yeast) of depravity, disease and death, the serpentine alembic, with the aid of the furnace, disgorges a liquid fire, which consumes the health, happiness and lives of thousands and millions of unthinking infatuated men. The literal chemical term for this fluid would be the oxide of nutriment; and it is in this state that most poisons exist; being indebted for their activity to oxygen; as the oxides of arsenic copper, antimony, lead, silver, quicksilver, &c. The composition of alcohol is as follows:—Oxygen 37.35, Carbon 43.65, Hydrogen 24.94, Azote 3.52, Ashes 0.04, = 100.00. Composed of very inflammable materials, in a disengaged state, and mingled with more than one third of its weight of oxygen, the common vehicle of fire, it commences a kind of smothered combustion instantaneously on its reception unto the stomach; corrodes the organs of digestion, excites an unnatural heat and violent circulation of the blood; attended with delirium, and succeeded by a loss of strength, proportioned to the excess of excitement produced by the irritating agent. Several other poisons produce similar effects. It is an infallible axiom in the physical organization of man, that every excitement of his vital powers beyond the point to which his Creator has adapted him, which is the uniform effect of alcohol, diminishes his capacity for repeating like motions from like means. Hence it may be safely inferred that every dram of spirituous liquors of any description, is a check upon the capital stock of strength and life, and hastens the approach of the hour of dissolution, in proportion to the indulgence. Each dram increases the appetite for another, and the necessity of an increased quantity, to produce an equal effect, multiplies in a progressive ratio. Thus it follows, unavoidably, that the habitual temperate use of ardent spirits is a pernicious and vicious practice. Besides its consumption of vital power, it will be found an unjustifiable and immoral habit in another point of view. It is a wanton and unnecessary waste of property, which ought to be religiously preserved, even by those who possess it, in ever so great profusion. Dr. Franklin says whoever draws a fish from the sea, draws up a piece of silver. Whoever swallows two gills of distilled spirits daily, annihilates 20 ounces of silver a year, or 20 bushels of rye; for the want of which many of his own posterity may eventually starve to death. In this way, it has been estimated by a late writer that the people of the United States, destroy 33,365,520 dollars annually. Considering this, and the many other useless and superfluous modes of diminishing the common stock of national wealth, there is no reason to be surprised to hear the present universal re-echo of "hard times." "dull times," "scarcity of money," "scarcity and high price of bread corn," "sales by execution," "difficulty of collecting debts," "insolvencies," "pauperism." &c. &c. &c.

APPENDIX.

AMERICAN POLITICS.

The reason why the citizens of the U. States are separated into two great contending political parties, calumniating and provoking each other with volleys of corrosive epithets and abuse, is to me inexplicable. Ask every citizen indiscriminately his political creed, and 99 hundredths will give synonymous answers. Both parties cling to the same standard, the federal constitution, and yet reproach each other with the terms federal, democrat, &c. without reflecting on the meaning of either. The word federal signifies nothing more than united, and has no concern with modes or systems of government whatever. The word democracy signifies government by the people, and composes one of the most essential and admirable qualities of our political system. Any other mode of government must originate from usurpation, violence, and oppression. It is very plain that no man is born marked by the Creator above another, "for none comes into the world with a saddle on his back, nor any booted and spurred to ride him." With rare exceptions it is the unanimous political theorem of the citizens of the United States, of both parties, that the people are the only source of legitimate power, and that legislators are only public agents, or servants, dependent on the confidence of their employers for the continuation of their term of service. All claim and assume the title of republican, the literal meaning of which is public affairs, general interest, common good, &c. Whence then all this senseless clamor about Toryism and Democracy, Federalism and Republicanism, British Influence and French Influence, &c. &c.? Can it spring entirely from pure patriotism on either side? Does not a great proportion of it proceed from self-interested aspirants for office, and publishers of news-papers? Let every one examine and decide for himself. In selecting candidates for public trust, beware of the imperious haughty Aristocrat or tyrant, whatever party or title he may assume. Without distinction of party names, let the indispensable qualifications, be integrity, capacity, wisdom, moral rectitude and patriotism.

But the most lamentable and mischievous prevailing political errors, after all, and which are confined to no specific party, are the customs of sending to the other side of the globe annually, several millions of silver dollars, to be exchanged for tree leaves, which produce an injury seven fold greater than the cost of them, in promoting the general epidemic of indigestion and nervous complaints ; of sending to Europe several millions more for contemptible trifles for the gratification of a vain and ridiculous fancy ; several millions more to the West Indies for rum, sugar, molasses, coffee, and tobacco, which co-operate in their effects as joint allies with the said shrubbery, first mentioned ; of sacrificing 20,000,000 more for whiskey the worst commodity of all, in our own country ; and lastly of paying many millions more to the numerous distributors of those various seeds of moral and physical-contamination three fourths of whom might otherwise, be employed in augmenting the national wealth, in a variety of useful occupations.

Soon after having finished the foregoing work, the author was presented, by a friend, with the following mournful dirge ; with a request to insert it, if thought appropos to the present subject.

THE LOVERS OF RUM.

I've mus'd on the mis'ries of life,
To find from what quarter they come,
Whence most of confusion and strife,
Alas ! from the Lovers of Rum.

I met with a fair one distress'd ;
I ask'd from whence her sorrows could come,
She replied, " I am sorely oppress'd,
" My husband's a Lover of Rum."

I found a poor child in the street,
Whose limbs by the cold, were all numb,
No stockings or shoes on his feet,
His father's a Lover of Rum.

I went to collect a small debt,
The master was absent from home ;
The sequel I need not relate,
The man was a Lover of Rum.

I met with a pauper in Rags,
Who ask'd for a trifling sum :
I'll tell you the cause why he begs,
He once was a Lover of Rum.

I've seen men, from health, wealth and ease,
Untimely, descend to the tomb,
I need not describe their disease,
Because they were Lovers of Rum.

Ask prisons, and gallowses all,
Whence most of their customers come :
From whence they have most of their calls,
They'll tell you, " from Lovers of Rum."
